

Bob's Way

The looped trails and 263 acres of Bob's Way provide typical New England landscapes: forested small hills, old foundations and stone walls, a wetland, and a beaver pond. The outer loop takes about one hour. Two crossing paths can extend or shorten hikes, and one rises to the land's high point, with a bench and an overlook.

Directions: Located roughly 3 miles east of Monterey General Store on Route 23.

TRAIL DESCRIPTION

Distance: 1.75 to 2.5 miles

Difficulty: Moderate (uneven footing, elevation changes)

Hikers on Bob's Way will have the choice of splitting off onto Cathcart Crossing, which gradually climbs in elevation and leads to a sculpted-stone sitting place, Dave's Bench, or the Truman Dowd Crossing.

The outer loop and crossing trails are ideal for hikers, snowshoers, and cross-country skiers. Visitors will find evidence of long-ago settlement in stone walls and the Dowd house cellar hole near the beaver pond at the land's southern end.

NATURAL HISTORY

Bob's Way's woods offer a mix of northern hardwoods, hemlocks, and occasional white pines, with stretches of mountain laurel. The forest, pond and wetlands are home to porcupines and otter, among other mammals. You may get to glimpse one of the beavers that keeps these marshy areas flooded to create prime habitat for a host of other wildlife. Near the pond is a mature oak—complete with a Berkshire Natural Resources Council sign—that a beaver gnawed halfway through at some point. The pond has also at times provided nesting sites for herons.
